Reflecting back: Joan Jonas returns to her alma mater

Revered for her innovations in performance, video and installation, Jonas will give a lecture and direct a performance at Mount Holyoke College, while MHCAM presents an exhibition of her mirror-themed works.

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. — The Mount Holyoke College Art Museum (MHCAM) is pleased to announce the return of internationally-acclaimed artist and alumna Joan Jonas to Mount Holyoke. Jonas, who graduated in the class of 1958, is currently the subject of a focused exhibition at MHCAM, “Promise of the Infinite: Joan Jonas and the Mirror,” on view through June 16, 2019.

Jonas will serve as the College's Leading Woman in the Arts for 2018-2019, presenting a public lecture on October 18, 2018 and directing a live performance on campus on January 31, 2019.

Over the last half-century, Jonas has experimented with new forms of artistic expression, blending video, sound, sculpture, drawing, and performance to create immersive viewer experiences that explore ways of seeing. Born in New York in 1936, she received her B.A. from Mount Holyoke before attending the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston and Columbia University, where she earned an M.F.A. in Sculpture in 1965. Jonas has performed and exhibited her work internationally since the late 1960s. Tireless in her creativity into her eighties, Jonas has received significant recognition in recent years with major traveling exhibitions in 2014 and 2018, organized by HangarBicocca, Milan and Tate Modern, London respectively. In 2015, she represented the United States at the Venice Biennale, and this year she was selected as a Kyoto Prize laureate, Japan’s highest private award for global achievement. A hero and mentor to a younger generation of artists, she is professor emerita at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.
Jonas, who splits her time between New York and Nova Scotia, last visited her alma mater in May 2016, when she received an honorary doctorate of fine arts from Mount Holyoke. “Promise of the Infinite” is her first exhibition at the College.

“We are truly thrilled and honored to host Jonas's solo exhibition here at the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum,” says Tricia Y. Paik, Florence Finch Abbott Director. “The opportunity to share her groundbreaking work with our students and community will no doubt foster inspiring dialogue about her lasting contribution to the arts.”

Focusing on the recurring theme of the mirror in her oeuvre, the exhibition brings together four works that span Jonas's prolific career. “From her use of looking glasses and mirrored costumes in her earliest performances,” notes Associate Curator Hannah W. Blunt, “Jonas has used the concept of the mirror to show that images are not facts, but reflections of our individual imaginations and assumptions.”

The four works in the exhibition include one of Jonas’s earliest films, “Wind” (1968), recently restored and digitized by the Anthology Film Archive, as well as a sculptural video theater from the late 1990s, “My New Theater II: Big Mirror,” and a video projection, “Mirror Improvisation,” excerpted from her multimedia performance “The Shape, The Scent, The Feel of Things,” which debuted to critical acclaim at Dia:Beacon in 2004. “Mirror Pieces Installation II” (1969/2014), a recent acquisition by MHCAM in honor of longtime curator Wendy Watson, completes the exhibition and distills concepts and physical components from several of Jonas's early Mirror Pieces into a video installation.

With their various mirrored elements—both tangible and metaphorical—the works in the exhibition distort visitors’ notions of space, and also complicate their roles as viewers and spectators. Jonas prompts viewers to consider the difference between looking and seeing, and between reality and its representation.

Jonas to serve as Mount Holyoke's 2018-2019 Leading Woman in the Arts, the first alumna in the program's 12-year history

As Mount Holyoke's 2018-2019 Leading Woman in the Arts, Jonas will discuss her work in a free public lecture titled “60 Years Later” on Thursday, October 18, 2018 at 5:30 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium at the Mount Holyoke College Art Museum. While on campus, she will also facilitate a leadership and careers luncheon with students, attend an advanced studio art class, and meet with the student participants in her January 2019 performance at the College.

The Leading Women in the Arts series was launched in 2006, and is organized collaboratively by Mount Holyoke's Weissman Center for Leadership and the InterArts Council, comprised of creative and performing arts faculty. The program reflects the Center's support of short-term residencies by internationally acclaimed artists, writers, and practitioners whose influential careers provide inspiration for a new generation of students. Invited guest artists are featured in public discussions about the interconnections between creative expression of all forms and cultural transformations.

“It is an absolute privilege to have Joan Jonas '58 return to Mount Holyoke to be our 'Leading Woman in the Arts' this year," says Amy Martin, Director of the Weissman Center. “She is a model for our students and for our entire community, demonstrating to us how being visionary and innovative makes one a transformative leader in one's field.

Past Leading Women in the Arts have included choreographer Trisha Brown, composers Meredith Monk and Kaija Saariaho, visual artists Ann Hamilton and Carrie Mae Weems, architect Billie Tsien, and writer and poet Claudia Rankine, among others.

Jonas is the first alumna in the program's 12-year history.

Early mirror performance by Jonas to be restaged at Mount Holyoke

In an historic, one-night only event on January 31, 2019, Jonas will direct a reconfigured version of her groundbreaking 1969 and 1970 performances, Mirror Piece I and Mirror Piece II. Fifteen Mount Holyoke students will perform the piece at 7:30 p.m. in the Dance Studio Theater in Kendall Hall.

Mirror Piece I and II were the first in a series of time-based works that established Jonas as a leading figure in the field of performance art. Motivated by feminist ideas, these pieces explored gender hierarchies, the power of the gaze, and notions of perception and representation.

In the original staging of Mirror Piece I at New York University's Loeb Student Center, a group of mostly women performers moved in slow, choreographed patterns while holding oblong mirrors in front of their bodies. Two men walked among the women, periodically interrupting their movements to lift, carry, and deposit them in different positions. Facing out, the moving mirrors continuously revealed the reflections of the audience, complicating the relationship between spectator and spectacle. In Mirror Piece II, which was staged at New York's Emanuel-El YMHA, the performers carried heavier mirrors and pieces of glass, slowing the pace of their movements and creating a sense of risk and vulnerability to their bodies. For later stagings of these performances at the Guggenheim Museum, New York (2010), the Kulturhuset Stadsteatern, Stockholm (2013), and the Tate Modern, London (2018), Jonas incorporated reworked choreography and musical components.
